

The Command College of South Carolina at Anderson University is designed to provide extensive exposure to relevant graduate-level material specifically engineered for professionals in management positions. It is a demanding program that involves advanced study and dedication on the part of the participant as well as the agency. The program requires some 300 hours of classroom instruction, in addition to online and independent study over a 20-month period. There are significant out-of-class assignments, to include an independent research project. As such, candidates must receive the cooperation and support of their employing agencies. Because the program carries training and academic credit, normally participants attend class on agency time. By nominating a candidate, the agency is making a commitment to support the participant throughout the program.
